

Dear Ms. Porat,

Thank you again for the time, care, and encouragement you have given me throughout this process. I'm writing with a heavy heart, because I was recently informed that I will not be moving forward with Google.

What has been difficult to understand is that, in my most recent technical conversation, I provided the correct solution, wrote it clearly, and explained my reasoning step by step. I left the interview feeling proud of the work I did, and I believed I had met the standard being asked of me. Receiving a rejection after that has been painful, not only because this role matters to me professionally, but because this opportunity carries the weight of stability and safety in my life.

I do not ask for exceptions. I am asking for a second look, and for a second chance. If there is any way to review my feedback, consider an additional interview, or place me into a path where my skills can be evaluated again, I would be profoundly grateful. In my situation, work is not only a career step. It is the ground I stand on. It is what allows me to remain safe and keep building a life that I fought very hard to reach.

I would never waste the chance you have helped create for me. If given the opportunity to try again, I will show up prepared, steady, and grateful, and I will earn the trust behind that chance through work and results.

With utmost respect and gratitude,
